Operation Persist reviews deaths of two babies

South Australia Police on Sunday, 18/06/2017 10:30 AEST

SA Police are hopeful that million dollar rewards announced today by the State Government in connection with the tragic deaths of two babies may bring forth new information which could lead to their killers being held accountable.

The unrelated deaths, of Lily Jean Schettini at Smithfield Plains in 2010 and Dylan Robert James Lindsay at Port Lincoln in 2004, are being reviewed by investigators from the Major Crime Investigation Branch as part of Operation Persist.

The long-running cold case operation uses a range of strategies, including rewards, targeting prison inmates for information, detailed reviews of the evidence, new technology and seeking public assistance to resolve outstanding murder and missing persons cases.

New rewards were today announced by the Government in connection with 10 such unsolved cases – including the investigations into the deaths of 18-month-old Lily and 11-month-old Dylan.

Dylan Lindsay was found dead at a property in Ellen Street, Port Lincoln on Sunday 28 March 2004. Investigators say he was found with visible abdominal injuries after a serious assault.

Someone attempted to disguise his injuries by using a texta to cover the bruising and marks.

Photograph: Dylan Lindsay and his family (published with permission of his sister)

“This is a heinous crime and somebody should be held responsible for taking the life of this child in a severe assault,” Detective Brevet Sergeant Mathew Bengel, from Major Crime, said.

“We did a lot of work with the texta pens we found in the house – fingerprints and DNA testing and so forth.

“We certainly believe we have identified the texta used, but we’re unable to determine who drew on him.

“It certainly appeared that it was designed to hide the bruising on the lower and upper abdomen.”

Along with his older sister, Dylan had been left in the care of friends at the Ellen Street property by their mother who was struggling with drug and alcohol issues.

There were three other children at the house that night and varying reports of the movements of adults and children, with at least one report of loud yelling by a man in the area of the property early on Sunday.

“About 8am one of the adults approached the other and said ‘there’s something wrong with Dylan’ – they then run to neighbours because they don’t have a phone, and seek assistance.” Detective Brevet Sergeant Bengel said.

Two people were arrested in May 2004 in connection with Dylan’s death, but the case was later dropped as there was no reasonable prospect of conviction based on the evidence as it existed at that time.

The second Operation Persist case being reviewed, and featuring in the Sunday Mail newspaper today, is the death of Lily Schettini who was found unresponsive in a bedroom at a Smithfield Plains home in 2010.

She died as a result of blunt head trauma which is consistent with her having been shaken, assaulted or having fallen.

Investigators believe she died as a result of an injury inflicted by one of four adults who spent the night at the home.

Photograph: Lily Schettini

“Lily lived at the home with her sister, her mother and her mother’s defacto partner, but that night there were also two visitors – a man and a woman - at the address,” Detective Senior Sergeant Mark McEachern, from Major Crime, said.

“We believe she was assaulted by one of those people, but we have insufficient evidence to charge anyone at this time.

“This family was not known to the authorities, however police have concerns about the care of the children in the lead up to this death.

“With a $1,000,000 reward now available we would appeal for anyone with information – particularly those who were at the house that night - to talk to us about what happened.

“In my opinion they are the only ones who know exactly what happened to this little girl.”

Detective Superintendent Des Bray, the officer in charge of Major Crime, welcomed the provision of the new rewards.

“We know that a range of factors can influence someone’s decision to speak out about an unsolved crime and the passage of time does not diminish the grief of families connected with these cases,” he said.

“We have had success with this operation which is revisiting some of the state’s toughest cold cases and we hope that the offer of these rewards may be another reason for someone to examine their conscience and consider coming forward with vital information.”
